Cooperation

Cooperation is a very important character trait for everyone. Cooperation means working together and helping each other complete different tasks. When people cooperate with each other, the tasks are much easier and more fun to complete.

I play sports and this year I began to play basketball at school on our girls' basketball team. Our team had to cooperate with each other by going to the practices and working together to learn the different plays for our games. During our games, we were able to make different plays by cooperating and teamwork with our players and our coach. We won one of our games by one point this year because of our team's cooperation with one another.

Cooperating at home is working together and helping each other do chores so that we can all do fun things. My family cooperates with each other when we do our chores. I help my family by cleaning my room and feeding our pets. I also help at dinner time by setting the table and helping with clean up. When my Dad gets ready to mow the yard, I help him by picking up the toys so it is easier for him to mow.

When I need to go to an activity, my parents cooperate with each other and me to make sure that I get there. They work out with each other how and when one of them will take me and pick me up. They also help me with my homework and help me study for tests. We cooperate with each other to make sure that everything that needs to get done can be finished each evening.

Cooperation makes life more enjoyable. When you cooperate with others, it makes the jobs easier and life more fun. This is because the work is finished faster and you have more time to do fun things when you cooperate.
