What responsibility means to me is doing things even if you don't want to, people can rely on you, and you do the best you can at a task. Responsibility is very important in everyday life. Teachers, students, and all adults need to be responsible to make things work. Without responsibility, our life would be very unorganized. We wouldn't get anything done without responsibility.

Students use responsibility everyday, even if they don't know it. There are many responsibilities that we students have while we are at school. Some are bigger and some are smaller than others. Just getting up and getting on the bus on time is being responsible. When you get to school, you have the responsibility of getting to your right class on time and being prepared for it. Also, if you have homework, you are responsible to get it turned in on time and doing your best on it.

Students also need to show responsibility at home, too. Some ways they do this is by cleaning your room without somebody telling you to. Also, if you have a little brother or sister, and your parents aren't home, you need to be responsible by watching them. Even something as simple as cleaning up the dishes after supper is showing responsibility. Another simple way to show responsibility is to listen to your parents.

Somebody who I think shows a lot of responsibility is my older sister, Kim. She has always been responsible for as long as I can remember. Before she got married, and she was living alone, she had to be responsible to make sure she didn't spend all of her money on shoes. Trust me, that was very hard for her! But now she recently moved into a new house and she had to be responsible to make sure everything was ready. She is also responsible for getting home on time and getting supper ready for her and her husband. I can always depend on her if I need to. She is a very responsible person.

As you can see, responsibility is important to people of all ages. Everybody uses a little bit of responsibility everyday. It might not be in the same way, but we still use it. If nobody was responsible, nothing would ever get done. Everyone would think somebody else would do it for them. The point is, everyone needs to be responsible.
